Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Carter Farm, or "Everbreeze" as it has been known for a century and a half, is situated on top of the ridge of Boggs Hill, commanding a majestic view of the Ohio River country in the vicinity of Wheeling, Ohio County, West Virginia. The Farm consists of the principal residence, along with seven supporting structures.

The principal structure of the farm is the Carter family residence, constructed in 1848-52. It consists of five rooms (not including the entrance foyer and an enclosed porch) on the first floor and five rooms on the second, or top-half, story. The masonry residence is an unusually significant rural example of Greek Revival architecture in the Ohio River Valley. The story and a half square edifice, with hipped roof, exhibits refined detailing and excellent proportions. Reflecting the classic symmetry of the Greek Revival are the evenly spaced double hung windows of the first story, knee windows which pierce the broad frieze of the upper half story, and a centrally placed entrance way with rectangular overlight and sidelights. A Victorian-era porch was replaced in 1946 with the present one-story entrance portico which replicates, in most respects, the original 1852 portico. The 1852 portico had paired columns where the 1946 portico's columns are singular. Accenting the horizontal quality of the house is a belt course encircling the house above which the knee windows are situated. Another horizontal complement is the dentilated cornice which forms an upper line.

Typical of interior Greek Revival refinements are plain architrave trim of windows and doors and a delicate open string stair which rises to the second floor in a half spiral. The hardwood continuous rail and attenuated balusters evidence their original finish. All but 25 panes (which were broken in a violent wind storm in 1934) in the windows of the house are original. Gas lighting was installed in 1906, and three of these gas lights in the house are still functional. Ceiling rosettes grace both front parlors on the first level.

Of the other dependent structures on the farm, the most significant is the one story, gabled roof masonry slave quarters, contemporary with the residence, which are the only extant slave quarters in Ohio County. A masonry, out door detached kitchen stands adjacent to the slave quarters, and is also contemporary with the residence. Another structure of significance is the "Wool House", which was built in 1819 and therefore pre-dates the principal residence. There is a large two and a half story barn that, while quite striking architecturally, was built in 1948. A modern garage and two wooden farm buildings complete the inventory of the Carter Farm.

"Everbreeze", so named for the winds that nearly always sweep over this hilltop farm, stands as a pristine West Virginia example of rural Greek Revival architecture and a property of significance to Ohio County and the Ohio River Valley.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

"Everbreeze", located at the summit of a ridge on Boggs Hill Road near Wheeling, Ohio County, West Virginia, is significant as the oldest continuously operated single family farm in Ohio County (and one of the oldest such in West Virginia),¹ as home to a family prominent in the history of Ohio County,² and as a significant example of Greek Revival architecture in Ohio County.³

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. The Carter family came to Ohio County in 1796, only twenty years after its formation, and acquired the 400 acre farm along the ridge of Boggs Hill near the Ohio River. The family constructed a log dwelling to use as a residence and, over the years, other log and wood buildings arose on the property to accommodate the ever increasing agricultural activities. The "Wool House", a log building constructed in 1819, is the oldest standing structure on the farm.

By the 1840's the Carter family's fortunes had risen to the point where Richard Carter could begin construction, in 1848, of the handsome Greek Revival residence that is still the Carter family seat. The house was completed in 1852, much of the work being done by D.W. Gibson, a Wheeling master carpenter. The adjacent slave quarters, still extant, was constructed in the same period and is of a similar style. They are the only existing slave quarters in Ohio County. Over the years the Carter family continued to prosper. While some members of the family went into other professions over the years, "Everbreeze" continued to be the seat of a Carter family worked farm. It is presently the home of Harlan Carter II, the fourth generation descended from the original Carter settler, and he continues to operate it as a farm. This is certainly the oldest continuously operated farm by a single family in Ohio County, and one of the oldest such in the entire state of West Virginia.

2. As stated in section 1, the Carter family inhabits and works the oldest continuously operated farm in Ohio County. This alone would suffice to vouch for their status as a significant family in Ohio County annals. Several members of the Carter family of "Everbreeze" have also achieved a degree of prominence beyond the confines of the farm. Richard Carter, the 2nd head of the family at the farm, was quite prominent in Ohio County affairs and it was a sign of his prosperity that he constructed the fine Greek Revival-style residence that remains the focus of the farm.

John T. Carter I, born at "Everbreeze", became one of Ohio County's most prominent physicians, serving as Physician-in-charge at Cincinnati's Good Samaritan Hospital, assistant superintendent at Boston Hospital, and, later, as one of Ohio County's leading physicians, constructing a home in Triadelphia that was said by historian Cranmer to be "the best residence in Triadelphia".

Another John T. Carter, member of the same family, was one of Ohio County's leading bankers, serving as vice president of the State Bank and Trust Company and, later, as vice president of the Farmers National Bank in nearby Claysville, Pennsylvania. A civic minded man, he also served as deputy sheriff of Ohio County, as Mayor of Triadelphia, and as a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates, 1929-1931. While in the House of Delegates he served as chairman of the Committee on Banks and Corporations.

3. Sitting atop Boggs Hill and commanding an expansive view of the Ohio River Valley, "Everbreeze" is a significant example of Greek Revival residential architecture in a rural environment. Such residences are rare in this locality, and "Everbreeze", in its pristine, mountain top setting, is looked upon as a local architectural landmark of outstanding significance.
