7. Description

The c. 1842 George Washington Hollida House (Berkeley County Historic Sites Survey No. S-27; Photos 1-4), is a two-story L-shaped "I" house of brick construction, presently painted, with a five-bay facade and a four-bay original ell extending northward from the northwest corner of the house. The property is located in the rural unincorporated village of Scrabble, less than one mile south of the Potomac River, in northeastern Berkeley County, in West Virginia's eastern panhandle. The nominated property is sited on sloping terrain and contains six resources: the house itself (Resource No. 1; Photos 1-4), a drive-through shed (Resource No. 2; Photo 5), a smokehouse (Resource No. 3; Photo 6), a noncontributing well house (Resource No. 4), a noncontributing outbuilding built in 2002 (Resource No. 5; Photo 7), and a 1945 timber frame bank barn (Resource No. 6; Photo 7). The G. W. Hollida House is altered little from the original and retains unimpaired integrity in all of its qualities: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

The Hollida House is of Flemish bond brick construction and was erected on a rise above the roadway. It is oriented to the south with a foundation of native limestone and is capped with an intersecting gable roof of standing-seam metal. The symmetrically-massed five-bay facade incorporates a modestly-detailed centered entrance. A single-story shallow hipped-roofed veranda appears to date from the 1920s and extends across the facade, accessed by a centered wood stair and trimmed with historic lattice skirting. The porch rests on brick piers upon which sit plain wood posts devoid of notable ornament and includes a simple wood balustrade. A poor-quality c. 1890 photo of the house (Fig. 1) shows a single-bay pedimented portico over the main entrance. The earlier portico was likely replaced by the present porch, the design of which suggests that while obviously not original, it was erected well within the period of significance of the property. A bulkhead door on the west end of the porch leads to the basement. In the gable ends of the main house are unadorned interior brick chimneys; other brick chimneys penetrate the ridge line of the roof of the ell. Each gable end of the main house is penetrated by a single-hung rectangular pedimental window. The ell is four bays in length and one bay in width, with a doorway shielded by a curvilinear hood (Photo 1; Fig. 2) on the west elevation. The aforementioned c. 1890 view (Fig. 1) shows a pedimented portico over this door. The east elevation of the ell includes a two-story brick addition built against the main house (Photo 4) and a laundry roof of coursed rubble stone at the northeast corner. Between the laundry room and the two-story addition is a small screened porch. All fenestration on the Hollida House is flat-topped, with many original six-over-six-light wood sash intact. Some windows no longer retain multi-light sash, but all windows maintain their original form and scale. The windows on the facade are articulated by exterior operable louvered wood shutters.

The main portion of the Hollida House is a central-passage, single-pile "I" house<sup>1</sup> from which extends an original two-story ell. The interior of this principal section is bisected by a central hallway, from which an open-string straight-run stair leads to the second story (Photo 12). The stair includes a simply-detailed round newel with a combination square and turned cap. A modest balustrade with a round handrail further accents the stair. Each of the two principal rooms in the main portion of the house have fireplaces with original Classical Revival-style wood mantles (Photos 9, 10). The fascia of the mantle in the dining room is ornamented with delicate reeding (Photo 9). The ell contains a dining-room and the kitchen on the first story and bedrooms and a bathroom on the second. Most original woodwork has been retained including simply molded door and window surrounds and multi-paneled doors with rimlocks (Photo 11). An enclosed stair leads from the diningroom to the second story of the ell (Photo 9). Interior wall surfaces are of plaster and wood floors have been retained and are exposed in most rooms. The upper story of the Hollida House is somewhat more sparsely detailed than the downstairs and contains two bedrooms in the main portion and, as noted above, additional bedrooms and a bathroom in the ell.

The George Washington Hollida House is located in the rural unincorporated village of Scrabble, which is on the Berkeley-Jefferson County line, less than one mile south of the Potomac River which divides West Virginia from southern Maryland. The property occupies a five-acre tract, one acre in width and five acres deep, the topography of which slopes upward from south to north along Scrabble Road. Contributing dependencies associated with the house include a simply-detailed gable-roofed drive-through shed (Photo 5), a stucco-clad brick smokehouse (Photo 6), and a 1945 bank barn, 67' x 37'. Noncontributing features within the nominated acreage include a 1960s concrete block well house located behind the house and a modern, architecturally-compatible wood building completed in 2002 on the foundation of an historic dependency. The property is landscaped and includes a yard on the front and sides of the house and agricultural fields behind, all punctuated by mature shade trees of varying dimension.

The following properties are included in the nominated tract:

<sup>1</sup>This two-over-two-room house type was named by cultural geographer Fred Kniffen in a 1935 study of Louisiana folk house types. He so named these houses because most of their builders came from Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois. He expanded his discussion of this important folk house type in his 1965 article, "Folk Housing: Key to Diffusion."

8. Significance

The c. 1842 George Washington Hollida House (Berkeley County Historic Site Survey No. S-27) meets National Register Criterion C for architecture and is locally significant as a locally-distinctive brick example of the I-house, which is among the most prominent folk house types seen in the Midwest and Upland South. The period of significance for the property is c.1842, the estimated date of construction for the house; c.1900, the construction date of the contributing shed and smokehouse; and c.1945, the construction date of the contributing bank barn. The Hollida House retains integrity and clearly reflects its appearance throughout the period of significance.

The house was erected about 1842 for G. W. Hollida (1800-1861). In 1830, with his brother John, George Washington Hollida had acquired several tracts of land lying in portions of Berkeley and Jefferson Counties, in the Scrabble area. Hollida was a farmer who was thrice married and lived in this house until his death two months after the start of the Civil War. Although the subject of several internecine court cases, in the years following his death and the remarriage of his widow, Susan, the house remained in the Hollida family. In 1919, John Henry Hollida and his wife, Irene, sold the house and 103 acres to George F. Turner. Over the years, the farm has been subdivided; the nominated area contains five acres including the house and the aforementioned immediate dependencies.

The Criterion C significance of the Hollida House is vested in its position as a locally-distinctive example of a sparsely-detailed Greek Revival-style I-house, erected by a Berkeley County farmer two decades before the Civil War. The central-passage I-house was a favored design for domestic construction during the nineteenth century, and the Hollida House represents the popularity of this house type and plan. For purposes of comparison, another central-passage Berkeley County I-house is the Daniel-Grantham House (NR 1994), which anchors Thunder Hill Farm. This property dates from 1818 and is a Federal-style three-bay stone house, to which has been appended an 1882 wood addition. Both the Daniel-Grantham House and the Hollida House embody the characteristic plan and massing of the I-house, although with its addition, the Daniel-Grantham House is larger.

The I-house as a house form was identified initially by renowned cultural geographer Fred Kniffen, who recognized these homes as representing the dominate traditional house type found throughout the South and the Midwest.

The "I" house was first recognized in Indiana in 1930 as constituting a link with the Middle Atlantic Source area. It was recognized again in the middle thirties in Louisiana in the form of a house introduced . . . in the late nineteenth century by settlers from Kentucky, Illinois, and Michigan . . . these qualities all "I" houses unfailingly had in common: gables to the sides, at least two rooms in length, one room deep, and two full stories in height . . . Of all old folk types, the "I" house is by far the most widely distributed, notably as a rural dwelling.<sup>2</sup>

As rural areas were settled and agricultural lands cleared, a new agrarian middle class was born and "the 'I' house remained the symbol of economic attainment and . . . its only requisites, one-room depth and two full stories, could be in any medium."<sup>3</sup> The medium George Washington Hollida chose for his "symbol of economic attainment" was brick, laid in the decorative Flemish bond with alternating headers and stretchers. And while the five-bay central-passage plan was often employed for Greek Revival-style domestic design, the Hollida house is first and foremost an "I" house, and its significance as described by Kniffen is as one of the "humbler buildings [which] by reason of their adherence to type and numerical superiority are far more important as markers of basic cultural processes than are the uniquely designed individual structures."<sup>4</sup>
