BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The boundary of the Middlebourne Historic District has been drawn to mark the concentration of late 19th and early 20th century buildings along Main, East, and Dodd Streets that by design, scale, and historical linkage retain, to a large degree, integrity of setting, materials, workmanship, and association.

Middlebourne Historic District, Tyler County, WV

Section number #7 Page #1

The Middlebourne Historic District is located within the eastern section of the county seat of Tyler County along several of the town's oldest and most important streets. The quiet neighborhood retains a sense of place and character within a community of about 1,000 inhabitants that has served since the early 19th century as the site of the county courthouse with its commissioners, judges, and lawyers. Located on the north bank of Middle Island Creek, a stream famous in West Virginia for its great length, meandering course, and game fish, Middlebourne occupies a level bench near the central part of the county amid rolling hills approximately ten miles southeast of Sistersville, an Ohio River community that is Tyler County's only other significant population center.

Middlebourne's growth was steady but modest from the point of the town's founding around 1813. Through most of the 19th century, Main Street was little more than a muddy course of ruts waiting to trap horses and travelers. The town prospered, however, chiefly because hundreds of people came to the county seat to transact business with the county court. This, along with the discovery of oil and gas in the county in the late 19th century, assured the town a measure of prosperity and stability. While the rival city of Sistersville boomed during the oil rush of the 1890s and gained the lion's share of wealth, Middlebourne also witnessed growth in population. Aside from its service to surrounding farms, Middlebourne benefited from the discovery in 1894 of huge natural gas reserves east of town. From the 1890s well into the 20th century, commercial and residential construction expanded along Main Street, East Street, and Dodd Street.

Middlebourne Streets form a grid pattern of parallel lines running from north to south and east to west. Main Street and East Street run from north to south and Dodd Street from east to west. Within this concentration of the town's oldest buildings that is somewhat L-shaped, may be identified three principal sections: the courthouse-school complex; the Main Street commercial corridor (State Route #18); and the greater East Street residential neighborhood. All of these components present socially distinctive patterns of use; but because of their interdependence and close proximity the buildings provide a physical record of the community's experience. This sense of cohesiveness is the result of construction occurring particularly in the late 19th and early 20th century that shares a common scale, similar architectural details and ornamentation, and choice of wood and brick as the dominant medium of construction.

Most of the historic district's buildings are two stories high. Attics and parapets create minor height variations. The greatest number of buildings by far are constructed of wood, reflecting the region's plentiful forest and lumber resources that produced milled products for local builders and superintendents. A variety of fanciful sawn, turned, incised, and openwork wooden ornamentation was applied around windows and doors, in cornices, and at the apex of gables. A brick making facility just east of East Street was producing by 1905 high quality bricks that were used in the construction of the high school, East Street Methodist Church, and bank. Out of the locally prosperous interprise emerged the present Middlebourne streetscapes that despite inevitable modification retain much of their earlier appearance.

Anchoring the historic district is the Neo-Classical and Baroque Tyler County Courthouse (#12) at the intersection of Main and Dodd Streets. The companion county jail is probably the most significant county-owned example of 19th century penal architecture remaining in West Virginia. A short distance to the west stands the Neo-Classical Revival Tyler County High School (#95), constructed in 1907. The Dodd Street landmark is the home of West Virginia's first county high school.

The commercial buildings along Main Street north of the courthouse range in style and quality of construction from the brick Romanesque Revival First National Bank (1902, #18) to the Victorian Gothic Swan & Jemison Grocery (Smith's Drugstore, #20), an unusual 2-story frame building with pointed arch windows. The cornice lines of many of the places of business remain even although front gabled offices and shops add variety to the street's rhythm. An example of the smaller scaled building is the Underwood-Moore Shop (#32). Not surprisingly, many merchants lived in their shop buildings, or owned brick or frame 2-story houses on Main Street. Indeed, the earliest building's in Middlebourne are along the north end of Main Street. These early 19th century residences are the Quinif House (#53) and the Gorrell-Wetzel House (#50).

The third portion of the historic district, East Street, parallels Main Street. Here the residences, in addition to those along cross streets (Park, Broad, Court), date from the last years of the 19th century and first two decades of the 20th. Their visual importance is enhanced by the uniform presence of broad porches and lawns which, with sidewalks, create a uniformity along the tree-shaded street. The pronounced Victorian grandeur of the street is the result of a number of over-sized houses bearing towers, turrets, and deep porches. Good examples of this house type are the Weekley House (#80) and Huth-Fletcher House (#83).

Few major changes have spoiled the architectural ambience of Middlebourne's oldest neighborhoods representing a cohesive townscape and possessing an identity of time and place.

The following Contributing (C) and Noncontributing (NC) resources are part of the Middlebourne's Historic District:

- 1.) Pump Station, S. Main Street, metal clad, late 20th century ancillary facility. NC
- 2.) Middlebourne Water Company, 1925. S. Main Street, C. A 1-story, glazed block (terra cotta) building featuring a step-down parapet and 2 over 2 double-hung windows.
- 4.) Lemasters-Innie Fletcher House, c.1910. 107 Main Street, C. The simple frame cottage is a locally carpentered example of pre-Bungalow style construction.
- 5.) Engle-White House, c.1915. 105 Main Street, C. Frame 2-story house with a Craftsman-style 1-story porch.
- 6.) Setzer House, c.1910. 109 Main Street, C. The gable-front-and-wing frame house features a typical period 1-story porch placed within the L.
- 7.) Wall House, c.1900. 111 Main Street, C. Some Classical Revival details are present on this 2-story frame dwelling.
- 8.) Furbee-Stevens House, c.1905. 113 Main Street, C. This gable-front and side-wing 2-story frame house is a transitional Queen Anne with broad front porch. Vinyl clad. Contributing dependency at rear.
- 9.) Furbee-Noffsinger House, c.1884. 115 Main Street, C. 1-story, side-gabled cottage with a standing seam metal roof. Contributing cellar house dependency.
- 10.) Dr. Baker-Tice House, c.1900. 117 Main Street, C. This large 2-story German-sided, front gabled residence has distinctive window cornice heads and a Craftsman-style enclosed front porch. Contributing dependency.
- 11.) Tyler County Jail, 1874. Main Street, next to Courthouse, C. National Register listed (1980). The Victorian Gothic stone jail is a perfectly preserved vernacular interpretation of 19th century penal architecture. The Gothic parapet crenelations and bastion-like entrance pavilion are unique in this entire region.

- 12). Tyler County Courthouse, 1922. Main and Court Streets, C. National Register listed (1980). Holmboe and Pogue, architects. The dominant landmark in Middlebourne, the red brick and limestone appointed courthouse is a redesign of the 1854 building; its high tower, a Baroque element, and sculpture-filled pediment, are notable.
- 13). Smith-Biddle House, c.1950. 118 Main Street, NC. Modified Ranch, frame, hipped roof house.
- 14). Morey Stable and Ballroom, 1897. 120 Main Street, C. Long frame 2-story building with eight, 2 over 2 windows along the side. Served Morey Hotel next door.
- 15). IGA Food Store, Main Street. Late modified and greatly altered brick, block, and frame building. NC.
- 16). Masonic Lodge No. #34/P.O. Main Street. Late 19th century, C. Brick-faced fraternal lodge building with arched parapet and three arched double-hung 2 over 2 windows at 2nd story; c.1940's dining hall addition. A small N.C. building used as an upholstery shop is at the rear.
- 17). Middlebourne Volunteers Fire Department, Main Street. Recent L-shaped brick utilitarian 1-story building with wide front gable and 2 bays. NC.
- 18). First National Bank Building, 1902. Main Street, C. A little altered Romanesque Revival late Victorian banking house, two-and-one-half stories featuring rusticated textured stone first floor, and upper floors in pressed brick. Cast metal finials, date stone, and recessed sign panel with carved bank name.
- 19). Mensore and Villers, Main Street, 1900, C. Veneered in early 20th century in brick and glazed clay tile. Large display windows and recessed entry. Sidewalk wood-roofed canopy with metal poles.
- 20). Smith's Drug Store (Swan & Jemison Grocery; Charles Eastman Drug Store; Frank and Zula Smith Drug Store and Ice Cream Parlor), c.1890, C. An unusual Victorian Gothic frame, two-story commercial building having the appearance of a renovated church. Its pointed arch windows are its principal features.
- 21). Bank of Middlebourne - WV Department of Human Services, c.1898, Main Street, C. Two-story hipped roof brick building with tall stone-linteled, 2 over 2 windows. Entrance modified with shingled canopy. Built as a banking house.

- 22). Green-Parrot - Big C's Country Lounge, c.1900. C. The first beer parlor in town, operated originally by Emory Bramhall, 5-bay, 2-story side-gabled frame building with brackets and corner pilasters.
- 23). Kirchner Leather Goods and Wheeler Tailor Shop; Barber Shop, 1900. C. Cove-sided wood 1-story shop with gabled roof facing street and large double-hung windows flanking the doorway.
- 24). Home Store - Miller's Pharmacy, 1910. Main Street, C. Known for generations as the Home Store, the 2-story brick structure retains much of its early commercial storefront detail. A heavy metal cornice crowns the brick structure. The prism glass transom above the display windows, and fanlighted windows, are other noteworthy front facade features.
- 25). Smith-Keller House, c.1880. Main Street, C. Bracketed Victorian design with well-preserved, 2 over 2, double-hung windows and a 3-bay front porch detailed with turned posts, brackets, and decorative sawn work.
- 26). Hardman-Jones House, c.1880, or earlier. 233 Main Street, C. 5-bay Federal-style frame with possible log core; recessed entrance above raised stone foundation.
- 27). Peoples Store; First National Bank, 1898. Main Street, C. 3-story brick commercial block built for Dr. Parks. Common bond brickwork and a wooden street canopy are important details. Now used as Magistrate's office.
- 28). Goodwin Home, c.1925. Main Street, C. A modest bungalow, the plan includes a front gable with side wing.
- 29). Goodwin - Furbee Funeral Home, mid-late 20th century. Modern brick funeral home with side porte cochere. NC.
- 30). Gas Station and Carryout, Main Street. Late brick and block convenience store. NC.

Middlebourn Historic District, Tyler County, WV

Section number #8 Page #1

The Middlebourn Historic District derives significance under Criterion A for its long-term association with the events and traditional business of a county seat; under Criterion A for significant contributions to education as the location of West Virginia's first county high school; and under Criterion C for a large variety of commercial and residential buildings significant for their architectural styles and local vernacular design. The historic district's period of significance begins with the first building activity in what is now Middlebourn, county seat of Tyler County, about 1805 and extends to about 1925, the point at which the last building activity of consequence (within the historic district) occurred. Many of the latest buildings are Bungalow-Craftsman style residences.

Middlebourn is situated on the north bank of Middle Island Creek that drains almost all of Tyler County. The creek is said to be the longest stream in the United States not to bear the name of river. The town is centrally located in the county, a factor that has helped to unify its hilly picturesque 260 square miles. Middlebourn was established as a town by legislative enactment on January 27, 1813, on the lands of settler Robert Gorrell and was incorporated on February 3, 1871. Gorrell, who had purchased much of the land in what is now Middlebourn, had a portion of his lands measured off into town lots ca.1812. With the sale of these lots and the establishment of the county seat about 1816, the town began to grow. Middlebourn is thought to have been so-named because it was halfway between Pennsylvania and the old salt wells on the Kanawha (Malden area) above Charleston.

Tyler County was created from Ohio County in 1814 and named in honor of John Tyler, eighth governor of Virginia and father of John Tyler, tenth President of the United States. In the realm of small rural county politics the county seat, Middlebourn, held its own through the decades, managing to retain the courthouse despite the growth and increasing wealth of rival Ohio River city, Sistersville. The central location of the county seat and the hundreds of people who came each month from every section and from other counties to transact legal business, gave the town stability. Nowhere was this factor more pronounced than in the welter of business that whirled about the courthouse as the result of the discovery of oil and gas in the county in the 1890s. The world's greatest gas well, "Big Moses," producing 100 million cubic feet of gas per day, was drilled in eastern Tyler County in 1894. Resulting land speculations and real estate transactions of every magnitude kept clerks and lawyers busy in the county seat. Offices for lawyers, magistrates, and clerks could be found at several locations along Main Street. Indeed, the town's most famous lawyer, Arthur I. Boreman (1823-1896), who would become West Virginia's first governor and one of its earliest U.S. Senators, was reared in Middlebourn, studied law with his older brother, and in 1845 was admitted to the bar while residing in the town. (Boreman later moved to Parkersburg).

Another significant development in the townscape of Middlebourne occurred in 1906 when citizens of Tyler County passed a levy to create West Virginia's first county high school. With the purchase of land on Dodd Street for a new building, a large red brick Neo-Classical Revival-style building was soon under construction; it was completed in time for the first classes in 1908. With the opening of the new high school, a new system of secondary education was introduced in West Virginia. The system helped students to prepare to enter colleges and universities; it promoted social and cultural relationships and cooperation throughout the county; and it established a model for other rural counties that sought to provide more widely available educational opportunities. Teachers and board of education officials were to acquire and build houses along many of the streets within what is now defined as the historic district.

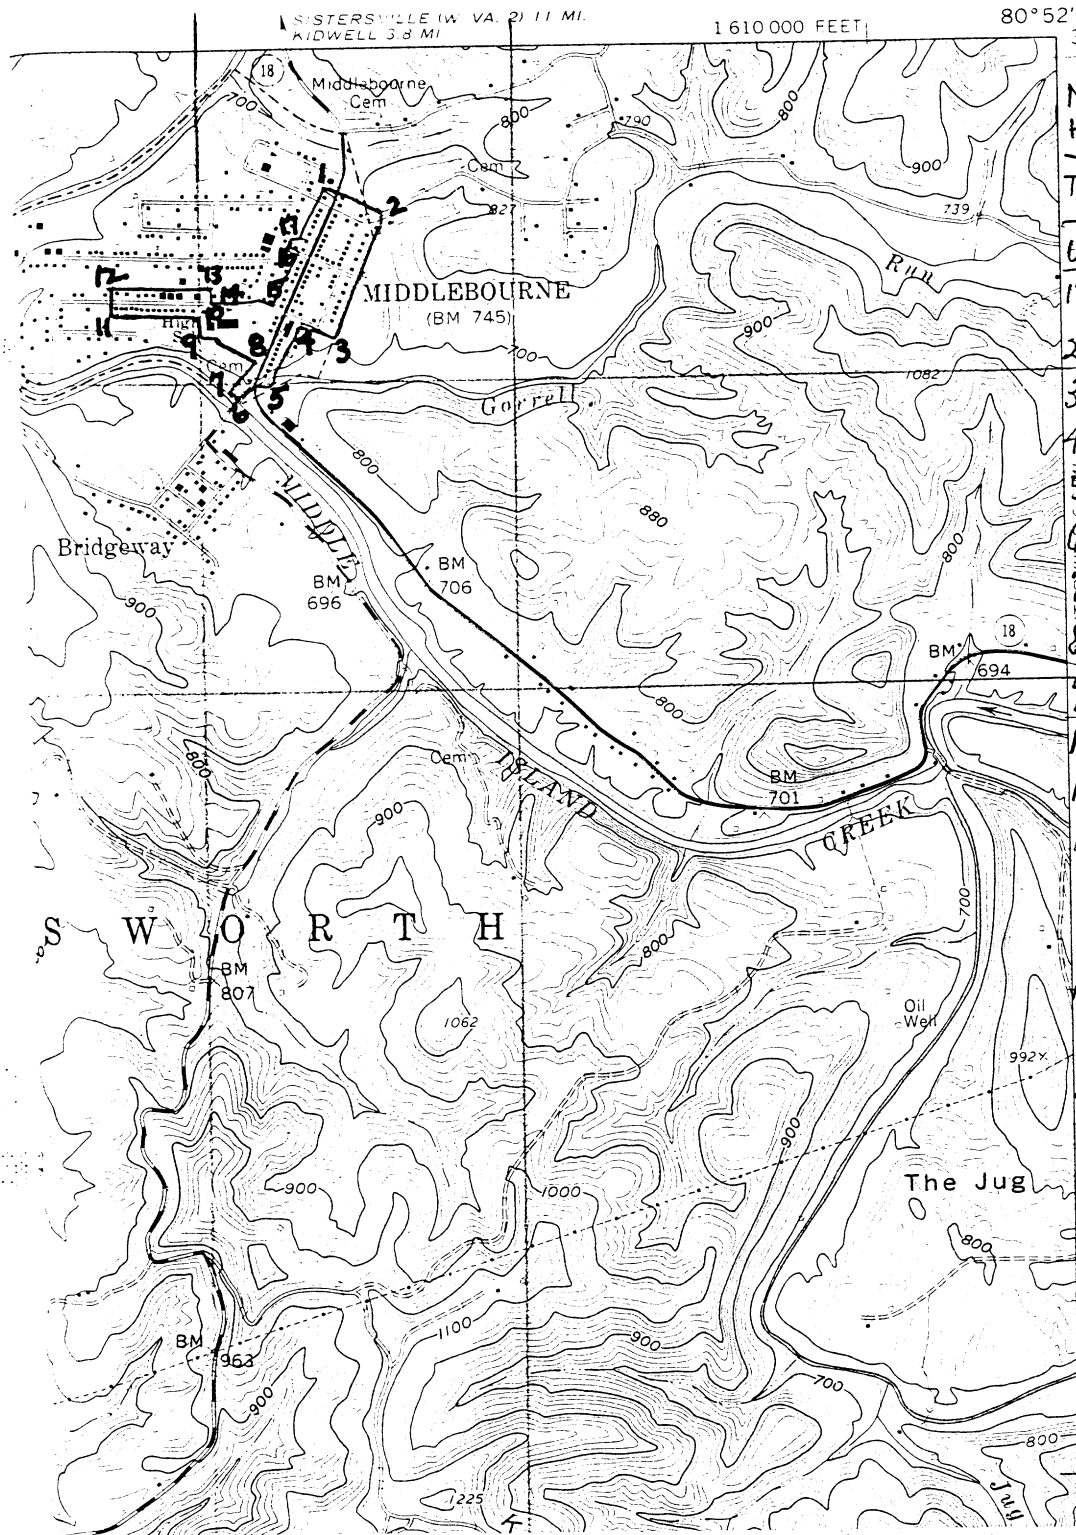

Population fluxuations in the town were never sizeable. Growth was slow and steady ranging from about 350 residents in 1883, to 403 by 1904. The population rose to 769 by 1940. The greatest building activity, however, occurred between 1890 and 1925. Much of this was supervised or performed by local carpenters and contractors who produced handsome vernacular frame houses, offices, and stores. A dominant theme of well-carpentered construction in Middlebourne is the 2-story (also a number of 1-story) gable-front-and-wing house. This building type was frequently clad in drop or German siding. Window frames, cornice heads, and gables were embellished with sawn, turned, or incised wood ornaments, and many early 20th century houses received gable and porch apron claddings in wooden shingles of various shapes and colors. It is the survival of these buildings in large numbers with their similar materials, textures, details, roof forms, and scale that distinguish the town's oldest important streetscapes. Significantly, the building stock is characterized by the visual importance of porches, providing a uniformity and relationship with streets. In some cases the yard is an important regular, rhythmic space between the house and sidewalk.

The architecture of the Middlebourne Historic District is that of small town America. The buildings of the closely knit neighborhoods possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. Their relative simplicity, utilitarian qualities, and sense of time and place are important to the history of the community.
