PESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Richwood Hall is an imposing two story brick home. The brick of the front elevation was laid in Flemish bond and that of the other side in common bond with a row of headers every sixth course. The window lintels are flat and are composed of gauged brick set soldier style. The wood cornice at the eaves has closely spaced modillions with the architrave beneath decorated with a hand carved serpentine band.

The existing entrance portico appears to be of a later vintage, its detail is not contrived as elaborately as the other wood work nor scaled to the breakfront of the facade. Porches are always more vulnerable to weather than other components and as a result were frequently replaced and not necessarily in the mode of the original.

A wood architrave surrounds the main entrance door with sidelights set to the sides of the brickwork. A fanlight surmounts the doorway. This same motif was used in the window immediately above the doorway and portico except that the architrave was capped with a pediment. A fanlight lunette appears in the gable of the breakfront. The window sash have six panes over six panes. A Victorian period slate roof covers the structure.

It is conjectured, from what can be seen without probing into the building fabric, that an earlier structure occupied the site on line with and immediately south of the main portion of the house. This could have been the earliest house on the grounds and probably served as a kitchen and servant quarters sometime after the main portion was built. Later it may have been decided to upgrade the kitchen quarters and the existing brick structure at the southwest corner was added. When this was completed, the earliest structure was removed and a connecting L-shaped porch was added to complete the renovation.

Very fine wood carving can be found in most of the rooms of the interior. It has been suggested by a former occupant that the name Richwood may have derived from the richness of the wood carving. The carving is geometrical in character and is meticulously executed. The mantelpieces are in excellent scale and reeding details from these are recalled in the decoration of the chair rails. The dados below the chair rails are paneled and the baseboards have simple cap mouldings. The window and door frames complement the mantelpieces.

An outstanding feature is the main stairway with tastefully executed fretwork at each tread along the outer stringer. The stringers at the landing are more ornate with delicately carved decoration.

Unusually fine large brass rimlocks adorn the main doors. These contrast with the simpler but later Carpenter locks found on the doors in the addition on the southwest.

On each floor the large single rooms at each end of the house open into a central hall  $11\frac{1}{2}$  feet x 20 feet. Ceiling heights downstairs are 12 feet. The kitchen wing contains two rooms on each level separated by a "Richwood Hall" in Jefferson County, West Virginia, consists of the two-story main section and a two-story southwestern wing connected by enclosed wooden porches. The southwestern wing is located to the west of the area where an earlier structure may have existed, and this was either incorporated in the southwestern wing or removed completely when the wing was constructed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Richwood Hall is historically significant because it stands on land which George Washington received from Lord Fairfax and subsequently turned over to Samuel. Several years later it was the site of a Civil War battle.

When Samuel Washington died, George took charge of his nephew, Lawrence Augustine, and sent him to school in Georgetown and Alexandria. In 1792, Lawrence was apprenticed to the famous Edmund Randolph to study law; in 1796 he acquired the property on which Richwood Hall is now located, and in 1797 he married Mary Dorcas Wood, the daughter of Robert Wood and granddaughter of James Wood who founded Winchester. They either built or moved into a small brick house which now forms a wing of Richwood Hall. Although Mary had been given a handsome home in Winchester named Hawthorne, she and Lawrence spent much of their time at "Richwoods" until 1802, when the property was sold to Smith Slaughter.

It is not known if the present brick house was built by Mr. Slaughter or by Joseph Shewater who bought it in 1829 from Slaughter's heirs. Nevertheless, only the best materials were used. Bricks were imported from England and possibly many of the carved pieces of woodwork were imported as well. There is a theory that Hessian soldiers, who settled in this area after the Revolution, made many of the fancier pieces of carved woodwork which decorate the interior.

In 1846, Shewater sold the property to John R. Flagg. During the Battle of Cameron's Depot, General Early located his men around Flagg's house and fired at Sheridan's forces which were located at "Locust Hill." A missile can still be seen embedded in the brick wall of the latter house and Richwood Hall still stands on its scenic knoll overlooking the beautiful countryside just as it did in 1846.
