Griginal

In the beginning the dwelling at "Wildwood" was an unpretentious double log cabin started in the fall of 1835 and finished 1836, having been built by John Lilly, Sr., of Bluestone. The original house consisted of four rooms, two up and two down, with a breezeway or center hall between. More than likely the stairway to the upper rooms went from this hall. Originally there were two windows on the front in each of the four rooms but now there is only one window where there were two. This conclusion was arrived at by examining squares cut out of the original logs. Since no mention was made of an outside kitchen, such as sometimes used in more pretentious homes of this period, I take it that food was prepared in a large fireplace in one of the downstairs rooms.

Period Subsequent to 1874

It was not until 1874 that "Wildwood" was remodeled as one sees it today. The four rooms were kept as they were but two rooms were added to the back—a dining room and kitchen with a loft or attic over these, made accessible by a small stairway going up from the kitchen. A wide stairway with early banister goes up from the front hall. All rooms were covered with pine sheathing; probably this was there from the first.

Recent History of the House

Large beams have been exposed in the two upstairs bedrooms, which give them much charm. The sheathing has been taken off of one bedroom and logs exposed; the other is covered with plaster board. The pine sheathing is still in the halls. There is a fireplace in each of the four rooms but mantels have been removed; three of the originals are on the premises. The floors are in good condition (pine) and all original except in dining room and kitchen. These rooms were turned into a kitchen-family room about ten years ago. The outside of the house was white clapboard and a front porch was added at the time of the remodelling. The house has a gas furnace in the basement but I am sure it is not usable now. There was no basement originally. Aluminum siding now covers the house.

Restoration Plans

The house will be restored to its 1874 (or thereabouts) condition. Aluminum siding will be replaced with white clapboard; the original porch, known from an old photograph, will replace the present one; rooms will be restored as they were in Beckley's time. Cost is estimated at $34,000.

Note: Mrs. Ralsten has many valuable and interesting family heirlooms to use in the house. These include Alfred Beckley's memo book as he was building "Wildwood"; his diary; a booklet on his trip to West Point; his appointment as 2nd lieutenant signed by Andrew Jackson; another letter signed by John C. Calhoun, then Secretary of War, and one by Robert E. Lee; about 400 pieces of mail to and from him and his family; the first Mrs. Beckley's wedding dress and pearl tiara; General Beckley's favorite chair, and other items.* There are plans to add the Lucille Ralsten lot shown on the property map to the complex, and converting the house to a museum.

* According to tradition, several of these treasures were buried by General Beckley under his first wife's crypt - then exhumed by Lieutenant (later President) Rutherford B. Hayes, only to be returned to General Beckley.
The land on which "Wildwood" was built once was owned by John Beckley, a man prominent in early American history; the house was built for his son, Alfred, as a log structure in 1835-36 by John Lilly, the most typical name in southwestern Virginia history. The house was remodeled by General Alfred Beckley, founder of the City of Beckley, a municipality of 20,000 persons. The house is now owned by the Raleigh County Historical Society, which has plans to restore it to the period of General Beckley's ownership.

John Beckley, from whom the city originally derived its name, possessed vast holdings in what is now southern West Virginia. While a student at William and Mary College, he was one of the original members of Phi Beta Kappa fraternity and later became one of the founders of the Republican Party. He was first clerk of the House of Representatives during the presidencies of Washington, the older Adams, and Jefferson. He was, in 1783, Mayor of Richmond, Virginia, and a member of the Board of Aldermen; clerk of the House of Delegates and Secretary of the Convention of Virginia on the Constitution of 1788; First Librarian of Congress and a warm friend of Jefferson. His only son, Alfred, was born on Capitol Hill May 26, 1802, during Jefferson's first term as President. John Beckley died in 1807.

Subsequently his wife re-moved with Alfred to Philadelphia, that being her former home. In May 1814 they accepted an invitation to live with life-long friends, Captain and Mrs. John Fowler in Frankfort, Kentucky. While there Alfred was a pupil of Kean O'Hara, one of the finest classical teachers in the state. He obtained an excellent background for his future schooling at West Point.

In 1819 James Monroe, then President of the United States and a personal friend of John Beckley, on the application of his mother through General William Henry Harrison, gave him an appointment to West Point. Upon an invitation from General Harrison, who was then a U. S. Senator, Alfred Beckley became a guest of the family at North Bend, Ohio, for six months, studying with the Harrison children under a private instructor. He was then sent to West Point by Senator Harrison and arrived September 25, 1819. He graduated on July 1, 1823, and was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant of the 4th Regiment of the United States Artillery. He served 12 years in the U. S. Army: two in Florida, two at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, six at the Allegany Arsenal, Pittsburgh, and two years in the garrison at Fort Hamilton, New York. In the Civil War he served as Brigadier-General, CSA.

In 1836, having married Amelia Neville Craig several years before, Alfred resigned his Commission as 1st lieutenant and moved from Pittsburgh to Fayette County (now Raleigh County) with the idea of improving his interests in the Moore Beckley Patent, a vast tract of land 170,038 acres in extent, willed to him by his father, John. He brought his wife and three sons, John, Neville, and Henry Martin, to the vast wilderness in 1827. They had six sons and when their only daughter was six weeks old, Mrs. Beckley died of the "ague." In 1850 he was married to Jane Ropp; they were the parents of three more children.

General Beckley gave land to the town for all the streets, the courthouse square and half the building lots, including a school, church, and jail. His whole life after coming to Beckley was spent unselfishly for the development and betterment of the community. He was instrumental in forming Raleigh County; worked tirelessly to get the Giles-Kanawha Turnpike through Beckley; served in the state legislature. He served as Brigadier-General during the Civil War.

He died May 26, 1888, and was put to rest at his beloved "Wildwood."

The second Mrs. Beckley lived on in the home until she died in 1901; at her death it went out of the hands of the family and was sold to the Lilly Land Company. Until purchased by Dr. and Mrs. M. M. Ralsten (Mrs. Ralsten is a great-granddaughter of General Beckley) six years ago, it had never been unoccupied in the 128 years.
